Suzanne Grace said, "Like us, animals have souls and like us, they may also have karmic contracts and spiritual obligations. A pet's afterlife is similar to that as a humans' afterlife. Our pets love to come back and visit and play; they will even meet and communicate with our new pets as well. If your pet was protective, he/she will often come back in order to ensure you are still safe. They will sleep in the chair they did while living and will jump on the bed in much the same way. Some have even noted a small indentation in the bed their pet slept on, long after their passing - an indentation that isn't always visible! So, if you smell, sense or feel your pet, please know that this is indicative of their presence."

Ursula Rabe (Right). In 2010, was elected the #1 Best Animal Reiki Master/Healer in the World. #1 Best Animal Communicator in the World. #1 Best Pet Psychic in the World

Ursula Rabe said: Animals are emotional and spiritual beings. They have an astral body and consequently there is an afterlife for all animals, pets or wild. They certainly deserve it.

They, like all of Nature, give so much to us who live on this plane - whether perceived by us humans or not.

Rabe: In my experience from connecting with those 'on the other side', their state of soul depends on the consciousness they have developed while living here.

If they were generally positive during the lifetime in their physical body, they will bring this into the afterlife and have positive experiences; they feel happy and content. If they have had negative attitudes living here, it naturally translates into an afterlife with negative experiences. This is a cosmic law. We all are manifesters who materialize our thoughts and feelings here as well as there.

But, in the afterlife manifestation happens in the blink of an eye. Being away from the vibrational density and heaviness of this existence and from the constraints of a body, as soon as a thought or desire is felt in the much lighter vibration of the afterlife, this sensation has to materialize into some sort of vibrational form.

Animals go to the afterlife like us; except they are happier right away, because more unconditional love, innocence, and lack of judgement naturally emanate from them. Just like with people the state of being and consciousness they leave their earthly existence with, translates into the afterlife. As animals are more forgiving than us, they usually recover from negative experiences faster than humans.

However - even though there is help 'on the other side' awaiting them - if they have never experienced love during their life here, it will take much longer for them to find peace in their new vibration. The foregoing is one of the main reasons why I purposely adopt senior special needs animals, who have had a rough life, in order to transmute their experiences and to give them a very happy and carefree retirement. This way they are prepared to be in a beautiful state of mind/soul when they cross over. This is a great commitment and a beautiful spiritual experience but the sadness of loosing a beloved happens more often than when one adopts young animals. This experience leaves one with a full heart and conditions the soul for greater spirit detachment.

I recommend it for everyone's sake, but cannot guarantee that you will not have to go through some heavy grieving. I grieve every time one of my seniors crosses over and it does not seem to get any easier. If you are a reader of this magazine, you are looking for answers that are deep.

Let me share something I have come to accept. In my humble opinion and contrary to popular belief, life is not about avoiding suffering - it is about finding meaning! Too many animals are misunderstood and abused by humans on this plane of existence, which is another reason why I am so passionate about creating greater understanding between humans and animals.

Furthermore, I want to commend all the - dedicated, mostly unrecognized and under-appreciated - animal rescuers out there who put their hearts and material resources into helping the poorest of the poor who cannot give back any tangible appreciation - but love and gratefulness: Whether you believe in something greater than yourselves or not, you are doing outstanding and unselfish spiritual work.

"Leaving Portugal" by Ursela Rabe. This painting deals with the concepts of soul and spirit. Oil on canvas.
Caption by Ursela Rabe: When I lived in Portugal it was mostly a very happy time. It is a very beautiful country with lovely people.

Artist Ursela Rabe. Below: Peace offering, oil on canvas, by Ursela Rabe.

There are many sunflower fields in Portugal and I felt like a sunflower myself living there. It was very sad for me to leave such an enchanted place. In this painting, one of the leaves of the sunflower is broken off and my eye is shedding tears for having to leave for a new assignment in the heart of Africa. However, once the tears hit the closest leaves, the tears start dancing - already in anticipation of new experiences by returning to my favorite continent. The sunflower is mostly intact and thriving, except for one broken off leaf (we always leave a part of us behind). Without being aware of it at the time of painting, I had created a work about the soul vs the spirit. The soul loves to be attached to people, places and experiences. The spirit needs to be free and detached in order to evolve. In the end spirit always wins, that's why life so often seems difficult and painful. The more we learn to detach from the past and embrace our experiences, the better life gets!
(Note: in 1987, Professor Kilege-Ya from the University of Lubumbashi, Congo, "President of International Art Critics", coined this a new style "Reflexionisme" which he attributed to Ulla. (Ulla is Ursela Rabe's artist name)

Spiritualists and lightworkers, thus I have asked the opinion of the best practitioners in the business, and here are their opinions and comments.

Melissa Stamps

The extraordinary Melissa Stamps: This has a lot to do with individual and spiritual beliefs and cultures.

The nature of the afterlife and Karma are infinite. In Sanskrit, Karma, originally meant act or deed, the obligation would also have to do with humans determining our own destiny. The choice of loved ones to reunite may be fulfilled. The Souls may know and recognize each other in the afterlife, but perhaps in different roles or relationships. Perhaps the widow would become the sister of (her husband) who becomes her brother. Or the husband could become the father to the woman who is then the daughter or son. It would really depend on any energetic agreement the two people made before the husband crossed over. The expressions of relationship in the Spirit world are infinite. There may be other aspects of love for each other to be experienced. They may both have a deep sense of familiarity with each other, and they may take on different genders or roles. If their Soul agreement was to come together again, as husband and wife then that is part of what is also possible based on their shared Soul agreement. For our Souls and Spirits to evolve, we may feel deep intense love for a Soul who was our husband or wife, but in Spirit may take on a totally different role so we can deepen our understanding of what love means, even though the Soul of the person (husband) is the same.

Le Vans Figueredo

Psychic and medium Le Vans Figueredo said: Yes, we can reach immortality and live in other worlds however, the questions is not about returning to that first husband as this a curiosity inquiry of this current life. Souls will indeed reunite eventually when its time to reunite, therefore the endeavor is not a mission but a destiny. The fact that there was a separation in this lifetime was merely to understanding emotions endured during the process and perhaps ones that we may have caused to the other (in a different World previously) and now our turn in this lifetime to experience. This can be interpreted as Karmic debts or contracts or some may refer this to "Cause And Effect" process. And the reunions of Souls will eventually happen in due process and in synchronicity with the Universe with possible change in roles, in the other World. That's why I encourage that our grieving for Souls should be one of celebration as it has begun its new journey in the other World just waiting for our arrival.

Ursula Rabe

Ursula Rabe, one of the world's top lightworkers, lecturer and eminent linguist said: I believe that the questioner would be with the partner she still has the most to work out with/learn from, had the greatest connection/love with - at least for a while.

But like life here, I believe that the afterlife is not static and there too things change and evolve (otherwise it really would be horribly dull and dead). It's all about the evolution of the spirit, not necessarily about the comfort of the soul.

The soul loves attachment, the spirit needs detachment. Ultimately, we follow spirit, i.e. our spiritual evolution. This is not an ego choice, but a spiritual urging which can be painful, but is ultimately the most satisfying and enlightening. I connected with my Mother shortly after her death. She had been very hurt by my Father's indiscretion with another woman and never had forgiven him for that; even after his death. When I connected with her a few days after her own passing, I saw both of them together holding hands. I was delighted but surprised and, when asked whether she had forgiven him, she waved to me and let me know that it all had been of no importance. This came through very clearly and was not some wishful thinking on my part.

She now could see the bigger picture of unconditional love and true soul connection that transcends our egos.

Jan Drake Bake

Jan Drake Bake said: I think technically in the Christian philosophy and religion the words used in the wedding ceremony of a marriage is "until death do we part." This in reference to the time of how long a marriage can last. The partners are pretty much off the hook so to speak in having to keep a marriage vow in the after life.

In my opinion, I still do not think there is an obligation no matter what one's religion or beliefs are concerning this issue.

I think when one reunites with their loved ones in the after life they can choose who they want to be with. There is more unconditional love as we have been told by so many for one another there.
